

The logo for 'NEW BOOKS IN GERMAN' is displayed in white, uppercase, sans-serif font within a light purple rectangular box. The text is arranged in four lines: 'NEW', 'BOOKS', 'IN', and 'GERMAN'.

New Books in German invites applications for its Spring 2018 Emerging Translators Programme.

Six emerging German-English translators will take part in the project. Each translator will be commissioned to produce a sample translation of a book from the Spring 2018 issue of New Books in German. The translations will be commissioned at the beginning of February 2018, and completed by early April 2018. Participants will be invited to a workshop in London on a Saturday in March, run by NBG editor Charlotte Ryland and translator Shaun Whiteside, where the group will work together on each sample translation.

Applicants are invited to send a short C.V. and a translation of the prescribed extract from Gertraud Klemm's Erbsenzählen (reviewed in NBG 42) by 12th January 2018.

Further Details

The Sample Translations:

Each sample will be 4,000 words long.

Each translator will be paid a fee for the sample, agreed in advance with New Books in German.

Each complete sample will be uploaded onto the NBG website.

The Workshop:

Participation in the project includes attendance at a workshop in London on a Saturday in March.

Lunch and coffee/tea will be provided free of charge during the workshop.

Limited travel grants for the workshop will be available for participants from outside London (up to £30 each). We regret that accommodation cannot be provided.

How to Apply:

Applications are invited from translators of German into English who have not yet published (or been contracted to publish) a book-length literary translation from German.

Applications should include a short C.V. and a translation into English of the prescribed passage from Gertraud Klemm's novel. The passage for translation can be downloaded from the NBG website: new-books-in-german.com/etp

Both texts should be Microsoft Word documents, and emailed to:

nbg@london.goethe.org

The deadline for complete applications is 5pm on Friday 12th January 2018.